

XM radio is a subscription service that is paid for by its members. What business or right does the National Association of Broadcasters have to dictate what services can be provided to listeners who are PAYING MONEY for the service? Hopefully common sense will prevail in this matter and the FCC will deal with this action in an appropriate matter. To my knowledge, the United States is still a democratic society with free enterprise. As long as XM radio operates within the guidelines of the FCC, the NAB should keep their mouths shut and mind their own business. I am a faithful XM listener since December 2003 and I will NEVER listen to conventional radio stations again. I have no problem paying the nominal fee for the excellent service that XM radio provides and will continue to do so.
